Adam Collier was raised in both Kentucky and Utah, and obtained his undergraduate degree in English from Brigham Young University. After obtaining his Juris Doctor from the University of Southern California in 1997, he moved to the Northwest and joined the firm.

Adam, a shareholder, practices exclusively in the area of management labor and employment law. His primary areas of practice include representing private and public sector entities in grievance arbitration, interest arbitration, labor contract administration, collective bargaining, employment litigation, wage and hour compliance, EEOC and Bureau of Labor proceedings, and drafting of personnel policies. Adam practices before the National Labor Relations Board and the Oregon Employment Relations Board, grievance and interest arbitrators, and state and federal courts.

In his spare time, Adam enjoys running, hiking, and other outdoor activities, as well as a good game of Scrabble.
